
The author urges philosophers to use statistical and other methodological techniques of social scientists to study problems in philosophical analysis, particularly certain problems of meaning and truth. What the expected philosophical consequences of such studies would be is not indicated in any detail.

PATRICK SUPPES